Upper Hutt History

CORRESPONDENCE – Sir here are further reminiscences of the early days of Upper Hutt as I knew it in the sixties and seventies of last century. What is now called the Brown Owl was then known as the Horse shoe Bend owing to the nature of the road up the hill. Maori Bank derived its name from the Maori community at that time across the river. The mode of crossing the river was by canoe. The flat at the bottom of Maori Bank as far as the rise going into the Upper Hutt was known as the fern ground. In 1857 the late J D Cruickshank put a tunnel through the hill to tap the Mangaroa River for water to drive a water wheel for a saw mill. The present railway tunnel runs part of the way beside it. He also laid a tramway of wooden rails over the hill to bring the timber logs from the Mangaroa Valley to his mill which was called the Fern ground Saw Mill. This mill provided work for some of the settlers for many years. The piece of land near Wilson Street and Benzie Avenue and Main Road Upper Hutt, was known as the Mill Clearing. Messrs Alexander, Pearse and Wagg's saw mill was nearby opposite the junction of Blenheim

Street with the Main Road. The original mill sheds were burnt down but other sheds were erected on the same site and are there still. Trentham the name of the Barton Estate a name they brought from the Homeland at that period began at Mr R Kearneys near the Oddfellows Hall and ran down to Mr Geo. Perry's on the river side of the road. A saw mill known as Haslam's Big Mill, cut timber here for years. One important person worked at this mill, a nigger known by the name of Charles Hill. He lived in a little house on what is now Councillor Blewman's front garden. He was a bullock driver by profession and had a Maori woman for a wife. He drilled in the militia with his white brothers and being a naturalised British subject claimed to be the first white man to cross the Rimutaka. The road to Trentham Camp and racecourse was for a long time known as No 2 Line at that time only a cart road through the bush used by the late pioneer Richard Geange. The property was afterwards taken up by a family named MacCullocks and was known as MacCullock's swamp. The NZ Rifle Association being hard hit for a suitable central range, the late Stewart Menzies himself an old volunteer got in touch with the late Major Sommerville and persuaded him to inspect the site. Major Sommerville communicated with the Government and the site was secured. The Maori village where St. Patrick's College now stands was just Maoris, dogs and peach trees with a little church and a cemetery. Silverstream was long known as a nasty little ford and was without a bridge for years. The chief place here was Mr Smith's. It was the first stage of the coach in the coaching days the four horses from Wellington were changed for fresh ones, whilst the passengers had breakfast, the next change and dinner being at the Golden Fleece Hotel Paekakariki. Trusting your readers will be interested in old Upper Hutt. I have a few more letters yet to send you. - J MARTIN Main Rd. Upper Hutt.
