An Unlucky Voyage

Before the Rangitiki was purchased by the NZ Shipping Company in 1875 the ship, under her old name the Scimitar, made a sensational run to Port Chalmers. The ship left Plymouth on December 24, 1873, with 430 souls aboard. Four days after sailing scarlet fever broke out. Two days before starting two families from Jersey were removed from the ship as the children were suffering from this complaint. The fever was followed by other sickness, including bronchitis, measles, diarrhoea and variola, which were confined to the children under seven years, with one exception. One or other of the diseases attacked all the children on board. Altogether there were 26 deaths before reaching Port Chalmers. Dr Hoskings was in charge and upon arrival he eulogised Captain Fox, the ship's commander, and narrated how, in spite of death and suffering, the passage was not without its pleasant side. The said Captain Fox married one couple and performed the ceremony of baptism on four occasions. What with reading divine service every Sunday, celebrating marriage, baptising the new babies, and burying so many, there had been enough work on the passage to keep a parson fully employed," said Dr Hoskings. The Scimitar on this passage departed finally from Eddystone on December 25th. She then threshed about for a week before getting favourable winds, and afterwards made a splendid passage to Tristan d'Acunha, where she called and took on board a supply of fresh meat and poultry. She crossed the Line twenty days from Plymouth, meeting with splendid trades each side of it, and she got fine strong westerlies from the meridian of the Cape. The vessel made an average of 1800 miles per week, her Eting being run down in 41deg, S. Fine weather with strong winds favoured her until making the Snares on 3rd March, where high seas were met with. She anchored at Port Chalmers on March 5th. The time occupied from land to land was 67 days, 71 days from Plymouth.
