New Zealand Times newspaper 25 April 1914

Holes in the ceiling- James Alfred Hazelwood storekeeper of Upper Hutt said that he used to occupy the premises lately occupied by Bengé and Pratt until about four years ago. Witness and his family had lived in the second storey. The flooring boards ran north and south. There was no ceiling in the grocery department. Witness had put a generator into his new building and had supplied Bengé and Pratt's premises with acetylene gas. He occupied both premises for some time. When Bengé and Pratt took over the connecting cock was turned off and he understood that the pipe had been plugged. Witness had been able to see the light of the ground floor by looking through the floor of the south front top room which he had used as a bedroom. Water would have run through.

An old building – William Joseph Wilkie settler of Upper Hutt said that he formerly owned the premises lately occupied by Bengé and Pratt. He occupied them for about eighteen months leaving four years ago. He had the ceiling in the grocery department match lined between the time that Hazelwood left and Bengé and Pratt took over. The wood used was tongued and grooved. The gas pipes were below the ceiling. He was positive of that. The pipes were of galvanised iron. The building was about thirty seven years old and the top floor was the same age.
